

NOTE ON CONTRIBUTORS

(in order of appearance)

Madina Tlostanova: Madina Tlostanova is professor of postcolonial feminisms at the Department of Thematic Studies (Gender studies) at Linköping University, Sweden. She focuses on non-Western gender theory, contemporary art, decolonial option and post-socialist studies. Her most recent book is Postcolonialism and Postsocialism in Fiction and Arts: Resistance and Re-existence (Palgrave Macmillan, 2017).

Lukas Müsel: Lukas Müsel is a Graduate student of English and German literatures and cultures with a special focus on Postcolonial literature and is pursuing a PhD in said field in the end of 2017. He is currently associated with the Global South project of Tübingen University.

Amrita De: Amrita De is 3rd Year doctoral student at the Department of Comparative Literature, SUNY, Binghamton. Her proposed dissertation topic focuses on a critical examination of different forms of hegemonic masculinities existing in South Asia. She also intends to explore how the idea of the heteronorm is given political and almost institutional legitimacy, in the workings of the present right-wing government in India. The timeline that she focuses on ranges from post partition India to more recent envisioning's of neoliberal India.

Ives. S. Loukson: He is a doctoral candidate at the Department of Anglistik, University of Bayreuth, Germany.

Dima M.T. Tahboub: He is an Assistant professor in Arab Open University, and member of Postcolonial Studies Association. He is also a member of Jordanian Parliament. His areas of interest are Postcolonial literature, the Literature of War, Palestinian Literature and the School of Commitment.

Joshua Agbo: Joshua Agbo is a Lecturer in the Department of Languages and Linguistics, Benue State University, Nigeria. He is currently doing a Ph.D. at Anglia Ruskin University, Cambridge. He is the author of How Africans Underdeveloped Africa: A Forgotten Truth in History (2010) and Dead Wood (2015), and the co-editor of the book: Linguistics: An Introductory Text.

Ahmad Mohammadpour: Ahmad Mohammadpour is a researcher at the Department of Anthropology at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst.

